MUDDY PAWS

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

This is the first website I've ever made, and my first time really digging into HTML and CSS (I never even knew the difference betweent he files before).

Whilst making my paper prototype, I knew I had to try and keep it simple as I didn't want to get too ambitious with the design, and thus programming. I looked at some other pet websites as well as online stores for fashion and other ecommerce to get a feel for how the product page might look. Once I'd converted this into a digital Mock-Up, I began to build out the site in sublime.

- At first, everything was just thrown ito Sublime, and each content piece rolled down the page, with huge gaps between lines and thing misjointed. USing www3 schools, I was copying their code, so a lot of it was set up to their standard, I later realized that I would have to go back in and tweak each part to suit the layout of my site. I wanted to have the boxes laid out horizontally, originally playign around with floats, and then finally evebtually figuring out that I should use in-line blocks. I think the research and understanding of the blocks took up most of my time for this project, but I managed to make it all responsive and link different layout of blocks to different styles.
- For the text, I was confused as to why I couldn't do a p1, or p2 alike h1, h2, and also realized that you can only have a maximum of 6 header types. I need to study this more and understand how I can apply specific style to text lines directly within the html without consulting the css file.
- I also spent a lot of time and went into the console inspect to understand the margins and padding a little better, as this helped me figure out the text spacing on the product page, although I never got a chance to make all elements throughout the rest of the site perfect. I would also go and dig into other sites at this stage to see how they were coded for the layout and get an idea of how to go about the problem.
- It also took me ages to align the text for the selction boxes, I tried multiple efforts both within html and the css file (I'm still not sure how I got it to work).

Unfortunately, I ran out of time, and after spending many an hour on this project I feel I have satisfied the requirements to a degree, but definitely learned a lot and am excited to push forward with finer tweaking and making the site operate smoother.
